single word requests - Someone who is granted access to information but ...

A thesaurus search for "custodial" has the same problem. They are all words for someone whose job it is to care for some thing. I want to include people who have access to that thing incidentally as part of their job. The word can be an adjective (applied to the position), noun (describe the position), or adverb (applied to job function).

What to use instead of "discardation"? [duplicate]

For computer files, e-mails, and the like, you might archive them, and later retrieve them from archival. Another possibility is to flag for deletion, which is reversible, as opposed to actual deletion. For physical objects, perhaps a better metaphor is to place in the discard pile (or bin). In gin rummy or canasta, for example, a card in the discard pile is temporarily out of play, but it can ...
