

developed and implemented a new approach to textile production

AI generated article from Bing

---

developped / developed ? | WordReference Forums

Hello, I cannot find if "develop", at the past form, has double P or not. It is : developped or developed ? Thanks

developed vs have developed | WordReference Forums

Hi, I would please ask you which of the options in bold is correct in the following (I prefer the present perfect): I developed/have developed an interest in machine learning over the course of my academic and professional career, and while consulting for multinational companies such as X Inc...

to be develop/to be developed | WordReference Forums

We all know "to be developed to be announced to be changed " is the correct usage in English. But nowadays I often see "to be develop, to be announce ...." without ed . Is it modern English? correct?

improve/develop | WordReference Forums

hello everybody; would you please enlighten me about the difference between the words "improve" & "develop"? thank you

developed to/for - WordReference Forums

or The XXX cartridging machine was originally developed to cartridge dynamite by wrapping that explosive mass in paper. I would appreciate your support to determine which of the two alternatives is the most appropriate to be used in this context. Which one should I use "...developed to or developed for? Regards.

'developed film' and 'have film developed' | WordReference Forums

After I have film developed, I have negatives and prints. I don't generally call the negatives "developed film," but I'm sure some people (professional photographers, for example) do.

have developed vs. have been developed - WordReference Forums

Approximately 1% of preschoolers experience depression; they often have great difficulty expressing their feelings, because not all of their language skills have been developed/have developed sufficiently. Hi, guys! I learned from Longman Dictionary that if you develop a skill or ability, or if...

Synonym for "developed an interest" | WordReference Forums

Hello, I am trying to find a synonym for the construction "I developed an interest in X because...". Is it okay to say something like this: "X holds my interest because..." ? If so, which adverb would be appropriate to use in order to emphasize that it holds my interest very much?

has been developed / was developed - WordReference Forums

Hi, is there any difference in meaning in the following context: [leaflet about a newly developed programme for IT specialists, first sentence] "Our programme has been / was developed by the best specialists in various IT fields. Throughout 2 weeks of courses we discuss such issues as WEB...

have developed /have been developed | WordReference Forums

The form, "have been developed," is generally considered to be a passive voice sentence that comes from an active voice sentence. When you say that the flowers "developed" however, you are using an intransitive verb, and these generally cannot be transformed into the passive voice. For example, it would be impossible to make a passive sentence ...