

informed consent in research with homeless youth is

AI generated article from Bing

CITI - Research with Persons who are Socially or Economically ...

Regulations require that IRB membership include: Members with sensitivity to community attitudes
To ensure that researchers are conducting a study according to IRB requirements, IRBs could:
Observe the consent process or research procedures

The Capacity to Give Informed Consent in a Homeless Population with ...

This study examined homeless persons with developmental disabilities and their ability to understand the informed consent process for research using a capacity-to-consent screener.

[FREE] Informed consent in research with homeless youth is: A ...

Informed consent is a fundamental ethical and legal requirement in research involving human subjects, particularly when dealing with vulnerable populations such as homeless youth.

Informed Consent & Homeless Youth: A Researcher's Ethical Guide

Navigating ethical research can be complex, especially when working with vulnerable populations. This guide explores informed consent in research with homeless youth is a critical area, demanding careful consideration.

Should Homeless Youth Participate in Research?

As long as homeless youth have the capacity to consent, research within the IRB age threshold is acceptable. However, if they are unable to access future risks, then these youth must not be included in research.

Technical Assistance Brief No. 5: Designing an Informed Consent Form ...

Informed consent is a process of sharing information between the investigator and the prospective research subject that will assist the subject in making an informed decision about whether or not to participate in the research.

Informed Consent: Protecting Homeless Youth in US Research

Informed consent in research with homeless youth is a critical ethical consideration. This article explores the unique challenges and necessary safeguards for obtaining informed consent from this vulnerable population within the United States.

Without parental consent: conducting research with homeless ... - PubMed

Issues and purpose: To identify the ethical and legal implications of conducting research with homeless adolescents and to discuss guidelines for conducting research without parental consent.

Informed consent in research with homeless youth is: Often carried...

Informed consent in research with homeless youth is: Often carried out with waiver of documentation when risk is no greater than minimal Allowed only with written parental permission when risk is no greater than minimal Permitted with signed certificates of confidentiality given to each subject or their legal guardian Complicated and should ...

Without Parental Consent: Conducting Research With Homeless Adolescents ...

The authors found that research ethics committees would permit the research to take place only if both the child's informed consent and that of his or her parents was obtained.