Is Kazakhstan European? : r/AskEurope - Reddit

Culturally and linguistically Kazakhstan has a lot in common with Mongolia than any european country, racially they are a mix between central asian and caucasian. I know that now that the UK is leaving there's nobody to stop the EU from expanding so they're looking at the Caucasus and Kazakhstan as potential partners, but think about this.

kazakhstan can into europe : r/2westerneurope4u - Reddit

1991 - Declaring Independence & Demographic Shift: Kazakhstan declared independence from the Soviet Union and saw a significant demographic shift with the ethnic Kazakh population increasing to around 70%, reducing Russian influence.

Well if Kazakhstan are secretly European nation in disguise, So ...

it's not a secret. Part of Kazakhstan is officially in Europe. That's how we got our UEFA membership in 2001. EU is not on the table for us though. and these are my top 3 reasons for it. Russia is literally a large piece of land that is between EU and Kazakhstan. So unless Russia joins the EU, there's no direct trade routes between EU and Kazakhstan. Same goes for Azerbaijan and Georgia ...
