LIBRIVERSARIES - JANUARY 2026 - LibriVox Forum

Librivox was born in August 2005 and since day 1, we have valued ALL our volunteers. Whether you participate daily, weekly, or just every now and then, you are part of our LibriVox family and we are grateful for your contribution*. This month we celebrate 134 active members who joined in January a year or more ago, and send a hearty round of applause for "job well done" and "thank you for ...

1-minute test - icecolbeveridge - LibriVox Forum

Hi Ice Your test audio has all the correct settings, so well done. There is however a lot of echo in your recording, giving it that distant, hollow sound. You need a deader recording space. Also, there may be too much background noise, but it's hard to tell since you didn't leave the 5 seconds of room tone at the end. You can find advice on improving issues like room echo in the Librivox wiki ...

Our Computers have to live longer thread - LibriVox Forum

Thought I'd start a thread on getting your computer to last longer. Now with RAM prices going sky high for reasons that probably are too real life to discuss here, everyone has to be looking at their computer and getting it to last another 3 plus years. I got my desktop computer custom built for voiceover about 2 years ago. Glad I did. I would not want to be buying a new computer now. I guess ...

check my 1 minute test - LibriVox Forum

Welcome Tree I reviewed your test sample, and while it sounds good there are some technical changes needed. LibriVox requires audio that is 128kbps constant bit rate MP3, 44.1kHz sample rate, mono, and between 86dB and 92dB, preferably 89-90. Your test audio is 102kbps variable bit rate, stereo, and volume too low at 80.6dB. Make sure input gain slider in Audacity (upper right with the little ...
