Welcome to the Café: International Sax Forum

Brought to you by saxophonist and composer Pete Thomas, Cafésaxophone is the ideal online establishment for saxophone players to meet, have a chat, a debate, listen to and critique each others' playing, share ideas or just find stuff out. Players (old & new), teachers, students, saxophone manufacturers, retailers - all are welcome to contribute.

Saxophone shops to visit in Tokyo - Sax on the Web Forum

Last week, I visited several saxophone shops in Tokyo. I bought a pre Voll True King alto saxophone in Ishibashi Windpal (Ochanomizu). The alto's serial number is #100xxx, this number shows that the alto is produced in 1925-1930. The cost is JPY 138,000 (around $1,400). I am a new saxophone learner (for 7 months) so I could not test the sax ...

Saxophones - What is the difference between the different types of ...

The main difference is pitch, hence size. Saxes are transposing instruments, so the fingering is the same for all saxes, assuming you're playing from a part for your instrument. In playing, the difference is firstly the pitch - most saxes are in either Eb (Bari/alto/sopranino) or Bb (Bass/tenor/soprano), although some can be found in C (C melody or C tenor, soprano) or F (really rare). This ...

Best Saxophone Shop Near North Carolina? | Sax on the Web Forum

Picked up the alto saxophone again this year since last playing Alto/Tenor in marching band around 2010. Want to thank this community with all the helpful advice and knowledge provided. I bought myself a Jean Paul student alto in case my enjoyment for playing has faded. Thankfully it hasn't! My...

Saxophones - Martin Indiana Saxophones - History and Models

The Indiana horns were of excellent quality (the Indiana saxophone, for instance, was a dead ringer for the older Handcraft Standard premium horn). "During war production buildup in 1942, Martin dropped the Indiana Band Instrument logo, and subsequently, labeled the horns as "INDIANA by Martin".
