What is the Hanahaki Disease? : r/FanFiction - Reddit

Hanahaki is fascinating because it posits that love is in fact a deadly mind-altering disease that will painfully kill you if you don't coerce another person into getting the same disease, like one of those behavior-altering parasites.

FANFIC FOCUS: Hanahaki : r/FanFiction - Reddit

The Hanahaki trope is basically extreme miscommunication manifested into physical form. I think it has a lot of potential as a trope but I don't often see the horror elements seriously explored enough.

How do you like your Hanahaki? : r/FanFiction - Reddit

I've been tossing around ideas for a hanahaki fic, and while I basically know the direction where I want to go with this, the sheer scope of possibilities to consider got me curious as to what people generally tend to like. So, I'm curious about two dimensions of this: first the mythical vs medical, second the unrequited vs unconfessed First off, do you like it when the disease is treated as a ...

Hanahaki Disease. Best trope? : r/FanFiction - Reddit

Hanahaki Disease is a painful, slow disease that often develops over months, if not years, and begins with coughing up a few petals, and grows in intensity and pain until the victim is coughing up entire flowers, at which point the disease has reached its final stages. If not treated, the disease is fatal."

What do flower types mean in hanahaki? : r/FanFiction - Reddit

I'm wanting to write a fanfic with the main character having hanahaki disease, but don't know what flower (s) to use. I know they have symbolism, but don't know the symbolism lol.

What happens if someone with Hanahaki disease falls in love ... - Reddit

In a lot hanahaki disease stories, there is a surgery that the diseased can get that removes the flowers. The surgeries always make it so the diseased loses feelings for their crush, but honestly, does that really matter if the crushee can't reciprocate the crusher's feelings?

Anime or manga with Hanahaki Disease? (Or one w/ unrequited love) What to Watch? Friend is too shy to ask so I'm here to ask instead hoping to get some replies. She's looking for something really specific, which is a character having "hanahaki disease" or any anime/ manga giving homage to that fictitious disease in one of their episodes/chapters.

Thoughts on hanahaki disease trope : r/FanFiction - Reddit

Yeah, the typical Hanahaki fics aren't too interesting to read -- usually just slow burn with the threat of death -- but the ones resulting in surgery or death are usually pretty interesting.

Has anyone here heard of the Hanahaki disease trope? I'm ... - Reddit

There's also "non-traditional" Hanahaki, which plays around with the standard trope elements. Usually fics in this circle change the effect of the disease, though the source is still unrequited love. Other times, "love" might be defined differently, the flowers might be more symbolic, etc.

Why do people like the fictional Hanahaki Disease? - Reddit

What makes the Hanahaki Disease appealing? Hanahaki Disease is used to illustrate heartbreak and suffering in a beautiful and symbolic way. However, do you think this disease is romanticizing the whole ordeal because of the flowery aspect and symbolic imagery of death, flowers and heartbreak? I would love to hear your thoughts on it!
